THE RECORD-PRESS.

Shade Trees.

The Editor of the RECORD-PRESS, who has set out a great many shade, fruit and ornamental trees in his life and who has thus tried to assist nature in beautifying each place, it has been his fortune to own and many others in which he has lived, warmly endorses the following clipped from the Louisville Times.

Louisville's shade trees are the people's pride. They give distinction to the city. No other feature adds more to the beauty of the streets and the individuality of the community—except the people themselves. The destruction of thousands of shade trees by the storm yesterday afternoon is a matter of regret, real and deep. Splendid old trees that had withstood the stress of decades and had developed into giants were uprooted as well as saplings which we hoped to see grow into giants in after years. In all parts of the city the damage was serious and deplorable.

The loss of the trees can only be overcome by the planting of other trees. The restful shade that has been taken away can be regained only by placing one tree in the place occupied by each of the destroyed trees.

Therefore, it is the duty of every citizen who lost a tree in the storm to plant another in its place. He owes it to himself, to his property, to his neighbors and to the city. It is the duty of the Board of Park Commissioners to place every tree destroyed on property under its control.

Trees are precious. They are invaluable to every generation. If we are content to allow our trees gradually to be reduced the time will come when Louisville will have lost much of its beauty, its home-like air, its comfort. Unless we keep them growing and flourishing future generations will have cause to swear at the folly, short-sightedness and prettiness of their ancestors. Shall we, who are grateful to our forefathers for preserving the city's trees, give and descendants cause for weeping our gnashing of teeth?

I am prepared to do neat darning. Can on me if you have any thing to be darned. MRS. NINA HOWERSON.
